Director of Best Beginnings*

Why the 30 million word gap is so important

Our words count. All of a sudden, it seems everybody – including politicians and major media outlets – is talking about the huge vocabulary gap among young children according to socioeconomic level. It's good news that opinion leaders are focusing on the importance of parents' verbal interactions with their children. Read more >>

Language gap starts in infancy, study finds

The quality and quantity of verbal interactions between parent and baby show up even earlier than previously thought, according to a new Stanford study. Low-income children show achievement gaps in language development as early as 18 months. Read more >>

Imagination Library linked to school performance

Scientific studies are beginning to confirm what we have always suspected about Imagination Library:
